Combing FOG and Shoutcast in Home Theater? Have you ever heard of the multichannel recording solution called FOG? It is a great and unique software which allows users to record their favorite videos streams from different types of devices, including internet radios, video games, DVDs, web streams and TV channels. That means that you can use it to record episodes of your favorite TV shows, video games, movies or music without recording audio from speakers. FOG has its own user interface known as SmartRec which is an easy-to-use and simple application. It has two main components: a front end where you can select and watch the videos and a backend where the recordings are stored. You can easily browse through the stored recordings and select the good ones. This solution works as a great tool to complement your home media center or TV-recording solutions. And if you use a computer with a wide-screen display, you can also set it to grab the output of certain web sites as video streams using Shoutcast. And, if you have a computer with multiple displays then it is a good idea to combine both FOG and Shoutcast options into one streaming solution. Shoutcast Playlist and Auto Rerun Command To run FOG and its Shoutcast services, you must use a computer with multiple displays. This is because Shoutcast and FOG stores all recordings on the local computer for review. So, to record your favorite stream you need to run Shoutcast on the computer with the display where the stream is playing. This does not always mean having multiple monitor displays on a single computer. It may just be two laptops which use only one display for each laptop. Since Shoutcast requires that the computer displays a video stream playing on one monitor, this may make it difficult for a user to watch the screen in a different location. If you do not have two monitors on a single computer, then you may use a Windows PC running Windows 8 or later and install an application called AutoRerun command. This application allows you to set your PC to playback an internet radio stream on one monitor, while allowing the user to view the other displays, such as browser windows. The application also allows you to create a playlist, then schedule, adding, editing or deleting items from a list. This means that you can set it to record
